

Are you ready for the upturn?

Planning ahead with Mirus

In these challenging times, there seems to be light at the end of the tunnel...

There has been a lot of negative press in recent months about the state of the economy, however there appears to be a positive message being heard. It's true that organisations have been more careful with their money in recent times but with the IT industry driving forwards, strategic business plans have to include the use of technology.

Since the beginning of 2009 Mirus have heard an increasingly positive message from many of our 400 clients, this message is that they are not 'out of the woods' yet but plans are being made to push on and work through these difficult times. With our clients being ever cautious on which technology to utilise, Mirus provide expert advice on how to get the most from technology without it costing the earth.

IT can be expensive and complicated, but you can't do without it. Most organisations already use IT extensively and are likely to depend increasingly on computers in the future. Every organisation should have an effective IT strategy, discussed and accepted by trustees and all the staff involved; a strategy that ensures IT plays an effective role in developing your entire organisation's work.

However, organisations often find such a strategy difficult to develop in an environment with a perceived scarcity of funding.

So how do you plan ahead?

Performance

Another benefit of our health checks is a performance report. We can provide a detailed analysis of your IT network and infrastructure's speed and efficiency. This can include network speeds, hardware usage such as CPUs, memory and also storage capacities. We will highlight any hardware or software (even licensing) that needs attention. Some servers may be working on older versions of software, for example, and need bringing up to date with the latest technology.
